I have taken him out a few times already for little things but my husband and I are thinking about making a trip to Costco tonight just to get out of the house. Am I crazy to do this? He'd be covered in his car seat or I'd be wearing him in a sling 20+ Similar Discussions Found 1 by Patty Catalano Shopping with kids gets a bad rap. I wholeheartedly acknowledge that taking kids shopping will be neither quick nor easy, especially after wrestling car seats and transporting tiny tots through a busy parking lot. If you're going to take your kids shopping in only one store, though, that store should be Costco. You may think I've lost my mind because I actually want to bring my kids into an oversized warehouse filled to the rafters with pallets of ketchup and kayaks, but it is actually the best place to take your kids shopping. Here's my take: Parenting is all about perspective and playing the long game. Our babies and toddlers are going to be adults one day — adults who need to know how to read a grocery label, comparison shop, and pick the ripest fruits and vegetables. Although it would be easier to order groceries online or swing through curbside pick-up (and believe me there are days that I have!), I know it is my job as a parent to include my kids in these everyday adventures to develop life skills. That said, here are my five main reasons for bringing the kiddos with me on my Costco runs. I start going over our list in the car and ask my kids for their help in remembering everything we need. My children are 4 and 2, and their little minds are like sponges. I give each one a few items from the list, assigning them their favorite foods, making them more inclined to remember. Lucy's list often includes dried cherries, pistachios, and frozen fruit for smoothies, whereas Gus has dibs on the yogurt and hummus. While I may get distracted by, say, the deals in the gift card section, my kids rarely let me forget what is on my list! Mary Poppins said it best: In every job that must be done, there is an element of fun. What kids think of as fun is often quite different than what we, as adults, perceive. Kids learn by helping, so instead of confining them to the cart I set mine free and accept their help. (Luckily, Costco aisles are wide, so the kids are not likely to be in the way of other shoppers!) Before I drive the cart into the cold room, we pretend to put on our hats, mittens, and coats. Once inside the frigid tundra of the dairy cooler, I test their color knowledge. Can they choose the Kirkland Signature Organic Milk with the yellow label (fat-free) and not the red label (whole)? We also practice counting and I teach them how many eggs come in a package (and how to look for broken ones). For older kids, Costco is the prime place to put math skills into action. Learning how to read pricing labels, especially cost per unit, is a skill I didn't learn until college. Costco makes it simple, often showcasing the unit price right next to the item cost. Can your kiddo pick out the best deal? Strike up a more challenging conversation in the produce section: A bag of six avocados sells for $6.99, so how much does each avocado cost? Is that a better deal than we see at our regular grocery store? Hint: It usually is. I could go a lifetime without taking my kids to a home improvement store, with its tiny (open!) boxes of screws, nuts, and bolts right at eye level; sharp saws out on display; and flats of flowers just waiting to be toppled. Costco is different, and by specializing in bulk buys, Costco's cans, cartons, boxes, and bags are too large to knock off pallets as kids scamper down the aisles running their hands along the packages (as they do). So I've learned to relax, and let my kids touch and feel. I ask for their help to put the boxes and bags in the cart. They're always amazed that a bag of popcorn that's bigger than they are can be so light, but the jug of dish soap that comes up to their knees is surprisingly much heavier. I get a laugh, too, watching them figure out how to lift and maneuver the items from the bins to the basket. The comfort in buying products you know and love in bulk is obvious — there is always a stash tucked in the cupboard at home. But there's also risk involved, especially when shopping for tiny (and picky) humans. The after-school snacks that they loved last month lose their luster, and I'm left with enough granola bars to feed the entire neighborhood languishing in the garage. Instead of assuming that what my kids noshed on last month is what they want to snack on next, I let them choose. My kids love to have a say in what they eat, and I'm happy to oblige (within reason) — especially when the packs of snacks are that big! Despite my best efforts to prep and plan, not every Costco trip runs smoothly. You might even spot me sprinting down the aisle after a toddler wielding a minivan-sized bag of Pirate's Booty. Shopping games fall flat. Requests for help land on deaf ears. But snacks always grab their attention, and thankfully Costco's sample stations are scattered throughout the store. Those tiny cups distract the kids so I can pick up a few items on the way to the next sample station. Thoughts? How do you feel about shopping at Costco with your kids? Costco is making some changes to their operating rules to keep up with the Coronavirus pandemic social distancing guidelines. Some of the changes will represent a return to a sort of pre-COVID-19 normal (otherwise known as P.C.E.) and some will denote the brand new world that we're all living in, whether we like it or not.Starting May 4, the majority of Costco locations and Costco gas stations will return to regular hours. But even though Costco will expand their operating hours, Costco will also require all customers and employees to wear face coverings and masks every time they come into their stores. While this requirement doesn't apply to kids under 2, or people who can't wear masks due to medical conditions, the vast majority of people who work and shop at Costco will be expected to comply. Costco is also helping shoppers over 60 shop safely by providing 'senior hours.' Many Costco warehouses will be open for people over 60 or those with disabilities only from 9 a.m. to 10 a.m. every day from Monday to Friday. Costco is also limiting two shoppers per membership to enter the stores to limit crowding and encouraging members to still follow social distancing rules. Healthcare workers and first responders will have priority access to Costco stores, and Costco will be allowing shoppers to use their own reusable bags so long as they pack them themselves. They're also not accepting returns on paper towels, toilet paper, sanitizing wipes, and rice, and will limit purchases on certain items to curb panic buying. The famous Costco food court will have a limited menu and the seating area will be closed. Costco's eyeglass, hearing aid, floral, and jewelry departments may not be open depending on Costco location. SOPA ImagesGetty Images April 30, 2020UPDATE: Today, Costco announced new changes to its store procedures amidst the coronavirus outbreak. Effective Monday May 4, all Costco shoppers must wear a face covering that covers their mouth and nose at all times while in the store, according to the retailer's website. This new regulation will apply to everyone except children under two years old and individuals who are unable to wear a face covering due to a medical condition. You can view Costco's entire coronavirus response here.April 1, 2020In recent weeks, Costco has had to place restrictions on the way people shop due to the coronavirus outbreak. The chain's latest policy is a new limit on how many people can enter Costco stores with a single membership card. The policy aims to further ensure the safety of all customers and workers during this time.Starting on Friday, April 3, only two people will be allowed into Costco warehouse locations across the U.S. with a single membership card. Typically, members are allowed to bring two guests and any children they have along for the trip. Costco announced the latest change on its website, saying that the change "is for your safety and the safety of our employees and other members, and to further assist with our social distancing efforts."If you prefer to go group shopping at Costco or usually need to bring your kids along, know that this is only a temporary change. Prior to the new guest policy, Costco implemented other restrictions like a cut back on store hours, dedicated shopping hours for the elderly and most vulnerable, and limits on the number of in-demand items customers can buy. In some stores, the chain even placed a no return policy on in-demand items like toilet paper and rice to prevent people from panic-buying.Other essential businesses like Target, Whole Foods, Walmart, and convenience stores have had to implement similar restrictions in their stores to prevent the spread of coronavirus.
